General Survey of the Blue Shirt Society - officially adopted by this group of men for their organization, but following the establishment of the National Government in Nanking under the sponsorship of the Chinese Kuomintang in 1927 after the successful conclusion of the Northern Campaign of the Nationalist Army under the supreme command of General Chiang Kai-shek, national unity was in sight. However, as a result of the vigorous purge of communist elements among the Kuomintang members which commenced on April 12, 1927 and which gave rise to a ten-year struggle between the Kuomintang and the Communist Party in China, a feeling of indignation among the U.S.S.R. communists and their sympathisers was generated and was principally directed against General Chiang Kai-shek who was responsible for initiating the purge. During the following years, while directing state affairs in his capacity as Chairman of the National Government, General Chiang Kai-shek had always felt the necessity of taking effective measures in dealing with those who, either prompted by political ambition or motivated by personal ill-feeling, had persistently but unsuccessfully challenged the authority of the Kuomintang as the sole ruling authority of China. After many years of quiet and preliminary preparation and planning, a new secret body was founded on the suggestion of one named Lien Chi, a propaganda officer in North China, a secret organ that General Chiang China, by a number of staunch supporters of General Chiang Kai-shek. No title was officially adopted by this group of men for their organization, but in view of its similarity to the "Black Shirt" movement in regard to its organization and operation, the title of "Kuomintang Black Guard" was automatically adopted by the Kuomintang despite the strong denial of its existence by the Kuomintang or any of its leaders. From the modest beginning, this group of men soon became extremely influential among government officials and the rank and file of the Chinese Army in most of the Provinces of China. The activities of this group of men were similar to, if not the equal of, the SA in the Weimar or Nazi Regimes in Nazi Germany. For many years after the existence of such a secret organization became generally known, both civil officials and military officers in China had good reason to fear that they would easily be exposed by informants. The members of this secret organization were forbidden to admit the organization's true purpose was military; accordingly the members of the organization were of great account throughout the Chinese Republic. Their efforts to eliminate the Kuomintang from the government of China, and especially their numerous difficulties during the period of control of the Kuomintang, divided the organization into several distinct groups. It is now known that the Kuomintang, which had organized the Black Guards, could have successfully maintained his position as the Strong Man in Chinese politics.

Organisation of the Blue Shirt Society

To avoid dissension among the followers of General Chiang, it was arranged that this new Society, instead of being independent, became part of the Kuomintang, that is a party within a party.

Its method of organization was based on the cell system, same as that adopted by the Communists.

The object of the Blue Shirt Society was, briefly stated, to conduct secret service activities against individuals and organizations opposing to the alleged dictatorial authority of General Chiang Kai-shek and his administration, particularly the Communist Party in China.

Throughout the more than seven years' existence of the Blue Shirt Society, little details of its activities ever came to light which was due principally to the stern disciplinary measures in force among the members of the Society, who were forbidden to admit to outsiders that they were members of the Blue Shirt Society or to disclose its secrets under the penalty of death, which was the only punishment.

As was to be expected, affiliated to membership of the Blue Shirt Society was most strict and only Kuomintang members whose unflinching loyalty and allegiance had been proved beyond the shadow of doubt were admitted into the organization.

The promoters and leaders of the Society conshated, of a number of military leaders of the anti-Kuomintang forces: General Li Qianzhuo (李先卓),

General Chen Lianfu (陳聯夫), General Chen Li-fu (陳立夫), General Chen Kuo-Fei (陳果夫), General Weisien (吳劍先), General Kong-chuan (曾擴川), General Hsu Tung-tzu (徐東曾), and General Woo Shing-yeh (吳醒亞).
Based on this no accurate estimate of the membership of the Blue Shirt Society was possible because of the particular nature of the organization which was always shrouded by an impenetrable veil of secrecy.
It would be reasonable to assume, however, that during the later period of its existence, its membership must have at good figure if we believe, on the successive crushes had been such as would tend to prove that members of the Blue Shirt Society were everywhere in China and in practically all organizations.

Activities in Shanghai

Activities

The duties of the members of the Blue Shirt Society, aside from activities, were conducted by members of the Blue Shirt Society in China. (2) The unsuccessful military campaign against the Kiangsi rebellion fomented and directed by Li Tsung-jen (李宗仁) in the high command of the former Chinese Army; the founding of the Canton Revolution in 1926 under General Chen Chien-tang (陳炯明);
the reconciliation and 1927 with the Communist Chinese under Chiang Kai-shek (蔣榮禱) and Li Tsung-jen (李宗仁) both of whom were appointed as in 1928 and their execution in Nanking in 1936; the general base in the Kiangsi Province, communist elements were successfully and continuously breaking through loopholes in the net of government espionage and filtering into almost every walk of life in Shanghai. Alarmed by their activities, the Blue Shirt Society despatched to Shanghai the late Mr. Woo Shing Yah (吳醒亞), promoter of the Blue Shirt Society, to take up the post of Chief of the Bureau of Social Affairs of the Shanghai City Government and concurrently Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Shanghai Kuomintang Headquarters, which post he successively held until his death in 1936.

On instructions from Nanking, Woo Shing Yah established the "Li Zee" (The Chinese Youth Strength Society) (中國青年力社) in Shanghai which was in reality a Shanghai counterpart of the Blue Shirt Society conducting secret service work in this city.

With a view to successfully suppressing the local communist influence, two sister organs of the "Chinese Youth Strength Society" were at the same time established by the Blue Shirt Society under the sponsorship of Woo Shing Yah, viz:-

(1) The Middle Vanguard Society (中鋒社) the mission of which was to supervise student activities in local middle schools.

(2) The Shanghai Municipality Mutual Aid Society (上海市民互助社), the mission of which was to direct movements of youths among local Kuomintang members.

Preliminary preparations having been completed in the form of the establishment of the three secret service organizations above-mentioned, the Blue Shirt Society began to exercise control of, and gain a foothold in, the local educational circles, the press and other public organizations by installing instructors in schools and universities, editors and associate editors in newspaper offices, and secretaries in public bodies. In this connection, the Blue Shirt Society was successful in gaining an upper hand in its struggle against local communist influence.

Following the death of Woo Shing Yah in August 1936, the Chinese Youth Strength Society was dissolved while the other two organizations definitely ceased to exist in Shanghai at the end of 1937, in consequence of the withdrawal of the Chinese armed forces from the Shanghai area.

In dealing with the activities in Shanghai of the Blue Shirt Society in general, mention may be made of the general opinion that members of the Special Service Branch of the Bureau of Public Safety (later changed to Police Bureau) of the Shanghai City Government were regarded as agents of the Blue Shirt Society and many arrests of importance to the suppression of communism were made by the staff of that Branch between 1932 and 1936. Cases of kidnapping and assassination of notable communists in the International Settlement and the French Concession also came to light.

During this period, one of the most outstanding attacks by the Blue Shirts upon the "Left" was the disappearance of Miss Ting Ling (丁玲), a well-known Leftist writer, and her paramour named Hanu Feng, who, it was believed, were abducted from No. 7, Quinsan Gardens, off North Szechuan Road, on May 14, 1933 by Ma Zhao Wu (馬昭武), a communist renegade, then connected with the Bureau of Public Safety and engaged in communist suppression work.

This abduction was publicly denounced by Mr. Yang Ang-vuh (楊杏佛), alias Yang Chien (楊鎧), veteran Kuomintang leader, who was known to entertain sympathies towards the communists. Yang's open denunciation however soon led to his assassination in the French Concession, believed to be at the hands of Blue Shirt agents.

As a retaliation, Ma Zhao Wu and his successor Wong Yung Hwa (王永華) were respectively assassinated in the Settlement by emissaries of the Chinese Communist Party. Their deaths, no doubt, meant a severe blow to the activities of the Blue Shirt Society in Shanghai.

Another person of prominence among the local Chinese community was assassinated during this time in the person of Mr. Si Liang Tsai (史量才). Proprietor of the Shun Pao, who was alleged to have refused to accede to the request of the Blue Shirt

Society for installing its members in the newspaper office.

Present situation and conclusion

The Blue Shirt Society has been inactive, not only in Shanghai, but in China as a whole, since early 1938. General Chiang Kai-shek had in 1938 caused the establishment of an organization under the title of "The San Min Chu I Youth Group" (三民主義青年團) which is an independent organ but nominally under the Kuomintang with General Chiang as its head. The purpose of this organization is to promote good citizenship to supplement the New Life Movement, of which he is the sponsor. The important work of the Group consists of the promotion of civil service, collection of intelligence and the guarding against political thoughts opposing to the San Min Chu I (Three People's Principles).

It is possible that some youthful members of the now defunct "Blue Shirt Society" have been incorporated into the Group. Nothing is to hand, however, that would indicate that the Group is functioning along the same lines as those adopted by the Blue Shirt Society in the course of the latter's existence.

Following the withdrawal of the Chinese armed forces from the Shanghai area, neither the Blue Shirt Society nor the newly formed San Min Chu I Youth Group was responsible for the assassination of Chiang pro-Japanese elements in the International Settlement and the French Concession.

Information on hand indicates that one Tai Lich (戴笠), a staff officer of the Military Affairs Commission, Chungking, and ex-member of the Blue Shirt Society, who is now in command of the Special Service Corps of the Kiangsu-Chekiang Operation Committee, a guerilla unit operating in the suburbs of this city, is taking charge of the assassination work in this city.

Subject Youth Organizations of the Kuomintang formerly existent in Shanghai.

Made by C.D.I. Kuh Pao Hwa Forwarded by D. I. Crawford

During 1935, the following three organizations came into existence in Shanghai under the sponsorship of Wu Shing Yah (吳醒東), then Chief of the Bureau of Social Affairs and the local Tangpu :-

1. The Chinese Youth Strength Society (中國青年團), directed political activity among students in local universities on behalf of the local Tangpu.
2. The Middle Vanguard Society (中華先鋒隊), supervised student activities in local middle schools.
3. The Shanghai Municipality Mutual Aid Society (上海市民互助社), directed movements of the youths among local Kuomintang members.

The authority of administering these organizations was vested in the executive members of the local Tangpu who, in the execution of their duties, worked hand in glove with the leading members of the local branch of the Blue shirt Society.

While the Chinese Youth Strength Society (1) was dissolved following the death of Wu Shing Yah in August, 1936, who was concurrently director of the Society, the other two organizations, it is known, definitely ceased to exist in Shanghai at the end of 1937, in consequence of the withdrawal of the Chinese armed forces from the Shanghai Area.

It may be added that although a few individual members of these organizations might still be in hiding in this city, there is no indication that

The "Blue Shirt Society" was established in 1931 with a view to achieving an effective "Party Rule" and was sponsored by Chiang Kai-shek with a number of his most ardent supporters. This Society was a secret organization and only operated within the Kuomintang, its main object being to create a "strong Kuomintang feeling among the rank and file in the Army". When this was accomplished the warlords and their abuse of military power would be defeated.

The Society eventually became very powerful in most of the Provinces of China and caused most of the militarists to swear anew their allegiance to the National Government and to obey the Kuomintang.

Bran ches were established in Shanghai, Nanking, Hankow and Canton and in some instances the society members were known to have removed political and military opponents of the Kuomintang.

The Society was most active in Shanghai under the leadership of Wu Shing Yah (吳敬雅), Chief of the Bureau of Social Affairs of the Shanghai City Government from 1932 to 1934/lapsed after that and lost its chief through death on August 1936. Pan Kung Chan, then Deputy to Wu Shing Yah, became Chief of the Society but did nothing to further its activities and nothing was heard of the society until early in 1938 when Pan Kung Chan and most of his followers departed for Chungking, where he had been ordered to proceed by the Government.

From time to time, the Japanese owned newspapers mention the movements of one or other of the more or less well known members which is taken up by the Japanese owned Chinese language newspapers, but although confidential and discreet enquiries have been made no confirmation of such stories can be found.

The Society according to Special Branch information, is not active in Shanghai.
